

City Sightseeing New Orleans

By Angela Ash

I have been privileged to visit New Orleans on several occasions, and while I could never EVER say that anything was lacking, I often wondered why I never saw the big red bus. You know the one I am talking about. You see them in the large cities. They are synonymous with London, but it didn't take long for other cities to begin adopting the double-decker buses for their own.

And what could possibly make New Orleans more fabulous? Yup... City

Sightseeing has their shiny red buses driving the streets, stopping at all of the major tourist attractions, as well as giving you a bird's eye view of areas you've never seen, but should! See the French Quarter, the Garden District, bustling Canal Street and vibrant Rampart Street, and everywhere in between.

City Sightseeing buses are the first thing I look for when I visit a city. They give you a fantastic overview, helping you to plan what to visit and what to see. And once you know, you can hop on and off as many times as you like! You can even be spontaneous and jump off to visit a cemetery, and then back on to catch lunch in the Warehouse District. The choice is always yours! Not only can you ride the entire length of the route to hear the wonderful narrated tour, but you can use the bus as transportation back and forth to your hotel, or for a mid-day run to the casino. The options are endless.

But speaking of gambling, I will bet that this will be the best addition to beautiful New Orleans for a very long time. After all, it is difficult to improve upon perfection!
