

Soniat House

By Angela Ash

Situated in a quiet oasis at the back of the French Quarter, these lovingly restored French Colonial buildings offer a peaceful respite from a hectic day of sightseeing or a night out on Frenchman Street. While the location may feel worlds away from the lights and sounds of Bourbon Street, it is just a few minutes' walk to reach the festivities that are absolutely unique to this well-known thoroughfare. In fact, Soniat House is just a short stroll from all of the Quarter's famed attractions, including the French Market and a plethora of historical buildings, museums and tantalizing restaurants.

When stepping into the lobby of the Soniat House, which actually feels more like an inviting sitting room, guests are greeted with an absolutely flawless check-in procedure and a friendly host who is just bursting with helpful suggestions, directions and recommendations for their stays. This expressive welcome is yet a brief introduction to the wonders that await at Soniat House.

Guest rooms and spacious suites offer individual, period-style furnishings, and some have French doors that open up to private or communal verandas. Intuitively selected amenities include flat-screen TVs, turn-down service and complimentary daily newspapers and Wi-Fi. Discerning travelers who opt to spend their time in luxurious, spacious suites will appreciate the Jacuzzi tubs and private entries to balconies or courtyards.

Soniat House offers its guests a pleasing environment, with stone pathways, gurgling fountains and tranquil courtyards with tables and comfortable seating. Guests may have breakfast outdoors, or it may be delivered to the room, where it may be enjoyed in ultimate privacy.

When your stay in New Orleans requires a serene haven, close to the thrilling activities that the French Quarter has to offer, Soniat House is the obvious choice. Book your stay today to experience New Orleans the way it was meant to be enjoyed!
